Turkishpolitix.com, the independent policy portal on Turkish affairs has opened a new policy dossier on Turkey's elections in 2007.

2007 has the potential to be an unusual year for Turkey. Turkish political calendar will face crucial double elections. The elections are expected to influence the Turkish political spectrum in the next decade. The first one is the election of the Turkey's 11th president in April or May 2007, who will be in office until 2014. No individuals have officially declared their interests, although a number of active politicians are considered to be candidates. One of them is Prime Minister Erdogan.

Second key event on the political calendar will be the general elections scheduled for November 2007 and will determine the new government, which will govern Turkey until 2012.

Turkishpolitix's dossier on elections will cover: overview and latest information on the elections, news and opinions from key stakeholders.

"The double elections in 2007 will be a test for the Turkish democracy, " says Can Akdeniz, Chief-editor of Turkishpolitix.com. "With our new dossier we aim to deliver latest information to our users and support debates on the critical elections."

Turkishpolitix is the independent webportal dedicated to Turkish affairs. It provides news, analysis and information on Turkish politics and is covering a multitude of topics: foreign policy, domestic politics, EU - Turkey relations, security policy, energy, trade, economic policy, Cyprus and more.
