This week marks the official launch of FuseBid.com, a marketplace for the new web professional. Fuse Bid was conceived in response to the many shortcomings of its competitors and features improved logistics in the buying and selling process such as shorter auction period, easy Buy Out bidding, swap offers, full portfolio listings, keyword search, add-on options and no end-of-auction or escrow fees whatsoever. Users pay one low price to list domains, websites, templates or web services and keep full sale amount. This comes at a much-needed time as several similar websites and brokerage services are claiming between 15-60% in escrow fees. Fuse Bid has also implemented a comprehensive feedback rating system to keep buyers aware of seller reputation before bidding. Post-auction info exchange allows both buyer and seller to view full contact information for each other to arrange for a quick and easy transaction.

Users are welcome to test-drive this innovative new service throughout November with no listing fees. Auction add-ons are extra but can give a listing that extra push to its desired exposure and high bids. The sign-up and listing process is simple and fast. Sellers can choose to accept payments through a number of online and offline options including all major credit cards, Western Union, PayPal, etc.

Being the latest project from Fuse Media Ventures (New York City), the website will be undergoing a constant and massive targeted advertising campaign to ensure users get the most from their listings. Fuse Bid has set out to change the industry for web professionals across the globe. Expect new features and improvements as time passes and keep an eye out for this soon to be leader in the web marketplace.
